Lemieux led the NHL in scoring with 160 points, including 69 goals. He also won the Hart Trophy as the league's most valuable player. Lemieux's performance was all the more impressive considering that he missed 20 games due to injury.

The Trade of Wayne Gretzky

The biggest news of the 1992-93 season was the trade of Wayne Gretzky from the Edmonton Oilers to the Los Angeles Kings. Gretzky was the greatest player in NHL history, and his trade sent shockwaves through the league.

There were many reasons for the trade. Gretzky was unhappy with the Oilers' management, and he wanted to play for a team that had a chance to win the Stanley Cup. The Kings were willing to give Gretzky a long-term contract and a chance to play with other star players, such as Luc Robitaille and Jari Kurri.

The trade had a major impact on both the Oilers and the Kings. The Oilers struggled without Gretzky, and they missed the playoffs for the first time in 10 years. The Kings, on the other hand, became a contender for the Stanley Cup. They won the Presidents' Trophy as the regular season champions, and they reached the Stanley Cup Finals before losing to the Montreal Canadiens.

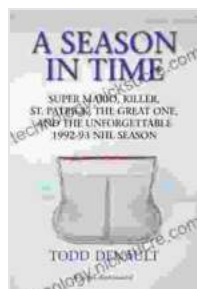

The Montreal Canadiens' Stanley Cup Victory

The Montreal Canadiens won their 24th Stanley Cup in 1993, and it was one of the most memorable victories in franchise history. The Canadiens were led by a young team that included Patrick Roy, Kirk Muller, and Guy Carbonneau.

The Canadiens had a tough road to the Stanley Cup Finals. They had to beat the Boston Bruins, the Quebec Nordiques, and the Buffalo Sabres in the first three rounds of the playoffs. In the Finals, they faced the Los Angeles Kings, who were led by Wayne Gretzky.

The Canadiens won the Stanley Cup in five games. Patrick Roy was named the Conn Smythe Trophy winner as the most valuable player of the playoffs.

The 1992-93 NHL season was one of the most memorable in league history. The season was highlighted by the emergence of Mario Lemieux as a superstar, the trade of Wayne Gretzky to the Los Angeles Kings, and the Stanley Cup victory by the Montreal Canadiens.
