Mia was born and raised in a small town in Mississippi. Her family was poor, and she often had to go without. But she never gave up on her dreams, and she always knew that she wanted to do something big with her life.

After graduating high school, Mia moved to New York City to pursue her dream of becoming an actress. However, she quickly realized that she wasn't cut out for the cutthroat world of show business. Undeterred, she decided to try something else.

In 2008, Mia opened her first Sweet Life store in a small shopping mall in Brooklyn. The store was an instant success, and Mia soon had to open a second store to meet demand.

Today, Sweet Life is a thriving dessert empire with over 50 stores in the United States and Canada. The company's signature dessert is its red velvet cake, but it also offers a wide variety of other cakes, pastries, and pies. Mia's desserts are known for their rich flavors and beautiful presentation.

Mia is not only a successful entrepreneur, she is also a generous philanthropist. She is the founder of the Sweet Life Foundation, which provides financial assistance to low-income families. She is also a board member of several charities, including the American Red Cross and the United Way.
